

DFI has completed the final versions of two reports commissioned by UNAIDS on Financing the End of AIDS as a Public Health Threat in Africa by 2030, together covering the whole of Sub-Saharan Africa. Each report analyses the recent history of financing needs and sources, and finds major continuing financing gaps between amounts being spent and needs to end AIDS as a public health threat by 2030. It then looks at additional financing which would be mobilised to fight HIV and fund the other complementary key Sustainable Development Goals on education and health over the next 5 years, finding for example that up to US$97 billion a year could be mobilised from debt relief to fill the financing gap for these goals. The reports will be launched on 19 September and at various face-to-face events during the final quarter of 2024
