In a podcast interview with the head of Debt Justice Norway, Joakim Carli, Matthew Martin explains why the burden of the debt on the citizens of the global North and South has never been higher; why the debt crisis has returned after debt was cancelled in the 1990s and 2000s; what negative impact this is having on all of our lives; how we can end corruption in debt; what needs to be done to provide debt relief to end the crisis, and how this can be done; why we need to reform the global system to stop debt crises happening again; and how the citizens of the world can unite to make this happen. You can listen to the podcast here .